Students Can Help STOP Human Trafficking

Students and teachers spend five days a week together. That means students are uniquely positioned to recognize behavior changes that could point to human trafficking.

Human trafficking is defined under Florida law as the recruitment, harboring, transportation, provision, or obtaining of a person for labor or services, through the use of force, fraud, or coercion.

“Human trafficking is a plague that we cannot stop fighting in our state and nationwide. I will work daily, along with law enforcement partners across Florida, to combat human trafficking and rescue survivors.”
